Question 1 | A change in mindset

Before this module, what did you mainly base your understanding of the beauty or value of a way of life on? After observing, learning about different ways of life and cultures, talking with participants, and listening to your classmates' stories, how has your mindset changed?

Explain your answer by giving at least one specific example, such as an event, a piece of information, or a quotation that influenced this change.

I don't very look that deep and find beauty and value of how people live there life that much. I might think that a job is simple or ordinary based on the tasks that I see people doing without thinking much about what happens behind those tasks. After getting to getting to rethink about it do some research, interview someone I'm not that close with my self and listen to many cool people my friend have meet with and talk too, and how they value connection and way of their life. One of my favorite with one is about the story about the grandma who grow a garden and how she view and use her money for long term and for the thing that she value while have enough patient acording to her belive that good thing grow slowly.

Question 2 | Living with People from Different Backgrounds

Based on what you have learned about observing, listening, and practicing non-judgmental understanding, how will you apply the idea of "looking deeper and listening more" when living and interacting with people whose ways of life are different from your own?

Describe at least one practical approach that you can apply in your daily life.

After I have listen to many good story about many people, I would take more of my time to understand more thing. I will try to observe and listen to their experiences. I think this is important because what I see from the outside may only be a small part of their actual life and try not to make assumption about someone and how they take their life too fast similarly to the coffee shop owner case. I will also pay attention to the reasons behind their actions and the relationships they have with other people. By doing this, I can avoid judging people based only on what I see on the surface and have a better understanding of different ways of life.
